Shark Week: Lessons learned from 20 years of 'Air Jaws'

Talk to Jeff Kurr and you realize this is a man with an endless fascination with Indeed, in the 20 years he's been doing "Air Jaws" films for Discovery's Shark Week, he's used innovative filmmaking techniques such as robotic seals, remotecontrol submersibles and helicopters, submarines, thermal imaging and highspeed cameras to capture footage of previously unseen shark behavior. In the process, he's gotten countless spectacular moving images of great whites breaching the ocean's surface in pursuit of prey.

This year, Discovery's all-sharks-allthe-time event, which runs Sunday to Sunday, Aug. 9-16, contains two of Kurr's films: "Air Jaws: Ultimate Breach Off," airing Aug. 9, and "Air Jaws 2020," on Thursday, Aug. 13. The latter is a retrospective show in which he and shark experts Chris Fallows and Dickie Chivell, among others, discuss their experiences making the landmark "Air Jaws" films.

One of the most important things they've learned about great whites is they're not the mindless eating machines they've been portrayed to be but rather shrewd hunters with an ability to strategize and size up potential prey.

"When you're in the water with a great white shark," Kurr says, "... you can see them looking at you and the eye twitching. And you see there's a lot going on there behind that eye, that the shark is evaluating you and showing caution and restraint if it feels a little bit nervous about what you are.

"And when you experience that in person when you're that close to a shark and you look into his eye, you really understand that these creatures are thinking about things, they're evaluating things and they have a lot of incredible senses that allow them to sort of evaluate you and figure out what you are and what their normal prey is and adapting to their environment. They're really, really intelligent animals."

For "Air Jaws: Ultimate Breach Off," Kurr remotely produced and directed this film during the pandemic using a South African crew and the What's App app to show how researchers used decoys, drones and underwater cameras to count the number of breaches and collect data on hunting techniques to see if the shark population is rebounding.

"It's basically three researchers who are sort of competing to capture the ultimate breach with the larger purpose of trying to document the amount of great white sharks in a certain area," Kurr explains. "Due to the lockdown, no one's been in this area for three months so they're trying to see if the sharks are taking advantage of that or if they're still coming into the area.

"And as it turns out," he adds with a laugh, "it seems like the sharks enjoy it when the people aren't there. There were plenty of them."

"THE WRETCHED"

One of very few movies to get a theatrical release during the coronavirus pandemic, this independently made thriller fared well at the box office ... relatively speaking, given the limited number of theaters that were open to be able to show it, but it still placed at No. 1 for its first several weeks. Written and directed by siblings Brett Pierce and Drew T. Pierce, it casts John-Paul Howard as a young man drawn into supernatural doings when he goes to live with his divorcing father. A literal witch ultimately is revealed as part of the mayhem, which involves such trademarks of the genre as possession and strange disappearances. Disney Channel veteran Piper Curda ("I Didn't Do It") plays the young hero's new friend, who also is given a personal reason to get to the bottom of the mystery.  (Not rated: AS, P, V) (Also on Blu-ray and On Demand)

"THE HIGH NOTE"

Released to home viewers vis On Demand at the same time it opened in whatever theaters were available for it then, this comedy drama gives Tracee Ellis Ross ("black-ish") a showcase that has the subtext of letting her pay homage to her music-icon mother, Diana Ross. She plays a veteran singer who's been coasting on her past hits for a long time, until her personal assistant (Dakota Johnson) – an aspiring music producer – inspires her to start working on new material, something their record label is skeptical about. Plenty of personal and professional complications arise for the women; Kelvin Harrison Jr. portrays a would-be musician who factors into their dealings; Bill Pullman, Ice Cube, Eddie Izzard and Melanie Griffith also are featured.  (PG-13: AS, P) (Also on Blu-ray and On Demand)

"BELGRAVIA"

"Downton Abbey" mentor Julian Fellowes adapted his novel also titled "Belgravia" into this Epix series, writing all six of the episodes of another period piece that weaves many characters into a backdrop drawn from history ... specifically, the Battle of Quatre Bras, which preceded Waterloo. That conflict has results that play out over many years for figures including an arms dealer and his wife (played by Philip Genister and Tamsin Grieg), who eventually relocate to the privileged London area known as Belgravia. There, their earlier dealings have unexpected aftereffects, some of which set the stage for major emotional complications for others as well. Alice Eve, Tom Wilkinson, Harriet Walter, James Fleet ("Four Weddings and a Funeral") and Tara Fitgerald also are in the impressive cast. ★★★ (Not rated: AS, V)

"AMERICAN MASTERS - MAE WEST: DIRTY BLONDE"

"Come up and see me sometime" isn't the typical line you hear on public television, but then again, Mae West hardly was a typical celebrity. The famously salty talent didn't hesitate to play up her sex appeal, from her time as one of the raciest movie stars of the 1930s to her tenure as an icon seen in such later films as the controversial

"Myra Breckinridge." Her decidedly colorful life and times are recalled in this tellingly titled profile recently broadcast by PBS, detailing how her independent approach to her career made censors and even powerful publisher William Randolph Hearst nemeses of hers. Still, she counted such popular actors as Cary Grant and James Stewart among her leading men. Executive-produced by someone else who's famously done things her way, Bette Midler, the program includes comments from Ringo Starr, Candice Bergen and actress-comedian Margaret Cho.  (Not rated: AS)

"THE PHANTOM OF THE OPERA"

There certainly has been no shortage of screen versions of Gaston Leroux's classic tale of a disfigured man who dwells in the bowels of an opera house. This 1962 retelling produced by the renowned Hammer Films company - and newly offered in a "Collector's Edition" on Blu-ray casts Herbert Lom, arguably best-known as Inspector Clouseau's ill-tempered boss Dreyfus in the "Pink Panther" comedies - as the Phantom, whose worshipping of a performer (Heather Sears, dubbed by Patricia Clark in the singing sequences) leads to suspense and tragedy. Michael Gough and Patrick Troughton also are in the cast. Among the special features are a longer version of the movie that was prepared for television showings, and a featurette on the horror-oriented Hammer studio's history.  (Not rated: AS, P)

Shoeless Joe looms over 'Field of Dreams' game

When the Chicago White Sox and St. Louis Cardinals take the field this week in Dyersville, Iowa, in what is dubbed "MLB at Field of Dreams" it will be hard not to think of Shoeless Joe

As played by Ray Liotta in Phil Alden Robinson's 1989 classic about an Iowa farmer plowing under his corn to build a ball field for disgraced, long-dead ballplayers, he was the first of the spirits to arrive on Ray Kinsella's (Kevin Costner) rural baseball diamond. And from there, he would invite the rest of his Black Sox teammates from the 1919 betting scandal, as well as other departed stars.

There are a few things to know about Shoeless Joe. He got his nickname at age 13 playing for a mill team in his hometown of Greenville, S.C. With his feet blistered from a new pair of cleats, he was in too much pain to put on shoes so he played in stocking feet. After hitting a bases-clearing triple, one fan was heard calling him, "You shoeless b..., you!" The moniker stuck.

The other thing is that the real Shoeless Joe batted lefthanded and threw right while Liotta's version batted right and threw left. Robinson had hired Liotta partly because he was so impressed by the actor's baseball skills, so the glaring inaccuracy, he felt, wasn't that important, reasoning that no one alive at that time had seen Jackson swing a bat and that the movie, after all, was a fantasy.

But it will be the real thing with real, living ballplayers Thursday, Aug. 13, when the White Sox and Cardinals clash at the newly constructed ballpark near the movie site in a game airing on Fox.

Find adventure and food knowledge on Journy's 'Travels With Darley'

An adventurer by nature, Darley Newman isn't above culinary thrill-seeking on her travel series "Travels With Darley."

Now available on Journy, Ovation TV's streaming platform and travel app, the half-hour series finds the South Carolina native on the road to less traveled corners of the globe to check out the local food and culture and take in experiences such as swimming with sharks in Dubai, bungee-jumping off the world's tallest commercial tower in Macao, free-diving for seafood with a community of women in South Korea and learning about sustainable oyster farming in Morro Bay, Calif.

In that episode, which is one of this season's new installments, she toured the Morro Bay Oyster Company's operations and donned a wetsuit to watch the farming in action. That, naturally, turned into a culinary experience as she got to "eat oysters literally right out of the water, so that was amazing. ... So that one stands out for me because the seafood and the quality of it is so great and you can learn where it's coming from and where your food comes from. I think that makes it taste better."

Seafood was also a theme in the South Korea episode, where Newman visited Jeju Island to visit a community of women that is on UNESCO's World Heritage List for their culture because for they go free-diving for seafood to feed their families.

"They're the main breadwinners of Jeju Island and it's like a matriarchal society to this day," Newman explains. "It was really fascinating. I went out and went freediving with them. The water was freezing, it was November, I had on a wetsuit. It was kind of hardcore. ... I actually filmed part of a segment holding a 360 camera and diving down with it and picking up seafood. And then of course we got to eat a few different things that we were harvesting from the ocean floor on Jeju Island, which was just amazing."

On the flip side, there was the episode she did in Culpepper, Va., where she explored the history, culture, natural beauty and food and drink of the Piedmont, including among other things, moonshine. For this, she connected with Chuck Miller of Discovery Channel's "Moonshiners" to get the lay of the land on local distilling.

"He is a character," she says. "And it's funny because I've actually done a couple of moonshine segments now ... but it was neat to take a tour there. That area of Virginia, people know it as wine country so we did vineyards there as well, but then also they've got moonshine and lots of different food and stuff. But the moonshine was really interesting and we went straight to the casks and also saw the process of how they're making it. And that was Belmont Farm Distillery. So that was a fun experience."
