COVER story BY ANTHONY RICHARDS Boutique offers selection with all women in mind

It has only been a couple of months since HERS opened its doors in Saint Johns, but in just that short amount of time, the local boutique has already made a lasting impression with its unique approach to clothing.

The COVID-19 pandemic made many people rethink about the way they viewed their life and the world around them. That was the case for HERS owner Jessica Bernard.

"At the height of the pandemic, I was pregnant and working in the medical field," Bernard said. "The long hours, mental stress and time away from my kids made me realize I was making a lot of sacrifices and my heart was no longer in it."

Her next step was to find the path that worked best with her life and the things she was most passionate about.

"I wanted to create a business that was more tailored to my life as a mom," Bernard said. "I live just a few minutes away and knew there was a definite need in the area for a boutique."

Although owning a business is no simple task, she had an idea of what it took to succeed in that world, and she decided it was the perfect time in her life to embrace being her own boss.

"I come from a long line of business owners. My husband owns two businesses and I wanted something just for myself," Bernard said. "Prior to my job in the medical field, I had an extensive background in retail. I always enjoyed selling things that had a story behind them. Whether the company had an interesting origin or was socially conscious, I found more joy when customers would purchase those items. With that in mind, I also wanted a store that could empower and inspire other women."

Her approach for the business model came from much of her own experience of being mom and raising a family.

As a result, she found that there are several ways to help empower women in the community and HERS offers Bernard the outlet to provide such help. That starts with the financial side of things.

"My No. 1 goal was to carry affordable products," Bernard said. "As a mom, it can be hard sometimes to spend money on ourselves. I wanted other moms to not feel guilty when they buy something they love."

The other side of the spectrum is the promotion of women who are in a similar position as Bernard and find themselves involved in the business world.

"We strive to carry woman-owned companies, brands that give back in some way and products to inspire and lift one another up," Bernard said. "I wanted to employ other women who needed flexibility in their lives as well. Their health and happiness is so important to me as an employer."

The boutique offers a wide range of women's clothing, jewelry, eco-friendly home goods, as well as baby and toddler products.

Just like the products, there are also a range of sizes available for all body types. HERS has sizes from XS to 3XL.

Bernard does her part to also support local artists by stocking the shop with pottery and crafts created by women in the area. Giving back to charities that help local women in need is also something that she feels strongly about.

"We want our customers to feel inspired by our products," Bernard said. "We want them to love their bodies for what they are and not what they could be. We want everyone to feel included and their needs heard."

At the end of the day, she not only wants her shop and her clothes to inspire others, but she hopes that she can be a walking testament and encourage other females to follow their heart and never forget what matters most to them.

"It was important for me to show my kids, especially my girls, they can do anything they set their minds to," Bernard said. "Not everyone is destined for a 9-5 life. I want them to think outside of the box and do something that brings them joy."

tasty tv 'Great Food Truck Race' hits the beach in Season 15 of Food Net series

With summer upon us, "The Great Food Truck Race" takes on a beach theme as it spends all of its 15th season on the Southern California coast.

Network and discovery+, the new round of eight episodes finds host and Golden State native Tyler Florence tasking nine teams of aspiring food truck owners with challenges that will test their cooking skills, marketing savvy and salesmanship.

So they'll stop in locales such as Laguna Beach for a spicy hot pepper challenge; Venice Beach, for a hempbased menu challenge and a visit from chef Antonia Lofaso; Long Beach, for a selling competition at the Grand Prix of Long Beach; and San Diego for a head-to-head finale in which the winner is awarded a $50,000 grand prize.

One of Florence's favorite stops this season - and one that was a big surprise to him – was at Glamis Dunes in the desert due east of San Diego, where Mexi-Cali cuisine is big and riding dune buggies is the sport of choice.

"There's like 100,000 people out in these wild hills of this big, massive desert formation," he explains, "and they just race these super-expensive dune buggies all weekend. And ...

I got a chance to drive one of these super-expensive off-road vehicles out through the sands, so that was a really, really good time. And some of these smaller little towns that we roll Premiering Sunday, June 5, on Food into are always like the biggest shows, the biggest stories. And so we just had great turnout."

> In Sunday's season opener, the competition kicks off in Laguna Beach, where the teams see their food trucks for the first time and are challenged with creating a dish from spicy hot peppers. Alliances are formed over the three rounds and one truck will be sent home, a theme that will be repeated each episode until the winner is crowned in the San Diego finale.

But in Florence's view, there are no losers here as each of the competitors comes away with knowledge of what it takes to be successful in this industry.

"They come out of this with some real hard, honed skills on how to survive," the Bay Area-based chef and restaurateur says. "So food quality and marketing and competition and teamwork and leadership and all these kind of things that scale up to the biggest businesses in the world start out with a food truck. And so if you can make this successful, you can make anything successful."
